SUPPORTING ALL WHO SERVE & HAVE SERVED

DECEMBER 2023

Dear Santa,

DVA has let the number of veterans disability claims received, but not yet decided, accumulate to well over 60,000.

Veterans are having to wait for decisions, many of which are life changing, for something round a year.

This is a ridiculously large number and a ridiculously long wait.

The Royal Commission has identified the long wait as a possible contribution to veterans suicide.

Would you please send your elves to sort the mess out?

Membership to our organisation empowers a team to achieve much within the veteran community, by assisting veterans with claims and applications on a wide spectrum of government provided avenues of compensation and benefits across 3 Acts of parliament.

Each as an individual is ineffective when lobbying governments for change, or to amend an injustice. Together as an organisation, with a strong membership we are able to, and have done, improve pathways for better treatment of veterans.

We survive as an organisation on the strength of our membership, and even if you have won the battle with Veterans Affairs (DVA), there is always the risk of changes in Government policy which may erode benefits and pensions or changes to eligibility entitlements.

We encourage membership from all who support our objectives, veterans, service and ex-service members, as well as war-widows and their families. You don't have to be a member or ex-member of the Australian Defence Forces (ADF). In most instances, anyone may join our organisation, with few exceptions, so why not enquire today.

It is through our membership subscriptions, fund raising activities and many kind donations from our members, and general public, that we are able to continue supporting our fellow Veterans and Service members in need, and meet our increasing welfare and pension workload.

Should you be able to help with a donation, or leave a bequest in your Will, it would be extremely beneficial and greatly appreciated.

We thank you for your kind support. ■

John Schumann does new version of

with the band, The Waifs

On the 50th Anniversary of the end of the Vietnam war and the 40th Anniversary of the release of the Redgum version of I Was Only 19, John Schuman releases a new version with a band that is an institution in the music world, The Waifs.

It is of course a great song and this new version is up to the task of honouring it.

You can watch and listen to the new version on UTube:

How could it come to this.

(it is reprehensible that government departments are not giving full cooperation to the Royal Commission into Defence and Veteran Suicide)

Defence and Veteran Suicide Royal Commission chair Nick Kaldas addresses the National Press Club on 13 September. Photo: Screenshot.

In a speech to the National Press Club on Wednesday, 13 September, commission chair Nick Kaldas said:

“Despite the government establishing a royal commission and the legislature wanting certain issues investigated, obtaining critical information from Commonwealth bodies in a timely manner has been difficult”

“Our success will require government and its agencies, including the ADF, defence and DVA, to, once and for all, get on-board and act.”

That they have not fully got ‘on-board’ is reprehensible.

1600 servicemen and women have committed suicide between 1997 and 2020 or 20 times the number of service personnel killed on active duty.

The Royal Commission’ chair, Nick Kaldas, further pointed out that the suicide rate for ex-serving men who served in the ‘permanent’ forces is 44 per cent higher than the general Australian male population., while for female veterans it is 107 per cent higher.

The tragedy is heightened when it is realised that, all things being equal, service personnel’s suicide rate should be lower than the general population because the selection procedure eliminates applicants showing any sign of mental instability.

This lack of urgency and tardiness is, of course, not new, especially in the workings of DVA, but that it would persist in the face of the tragic suicide figures is totally unacceptable.

The VVFA specially concurs with Nick Kaldas's criticism of DVA's 'adversarial culture, which he says 'has left many veterans re-traumatised when forced to justify their claims for compensation'.

The VVFA joins with the Royal Commission commissioners in demanding that the laggard Department of Defence, DVA and the ADF to GET WITH IT. ■

By the way

Nick Kaldas's acknowledgement.

'Fifty years on from the end of Australia's involvement in the Vietnam War, I acknowledge the lasting legacy of our Vietnam veterans in being the first to raise awareness about mental health and PTSD.

'Their experiences have helped shape modern society's understanding of these incredibly complex issues, which allows this Royal Commission to examine in depth the ongoing tragedy that is defence and veteran suicide.'

Careful Where You Sleep

On the Vung Tau Ferry

Ross Wood's selection of a place to sleep could have been better.

I returned to Australia on H.M.A.S. Sydney, sailing into Sydney Harbour on Friday 12 May 1967. That was a welcome return but the journey has left me with a frightening memory. Not so much of what happened, more what could have happened.

On the first two nights out of Vung Tau, sailing in the South China Sea, groups of us slept in the sponsons (platforms extending out from the side of the ship) until about 3am when pelting rain sent us inside.

My sleeping place was a small metal-box-type-thing immediately to the rear of the sponson, which was firmly attached to both the sponson and the hull, but was directly over the sea. Nothing between this box-thing and the ocean.

When I first tried it, it felt firm enough, so I curled up in that sleeping-bag-thing the Navy gave us and was comfortable enough.

On the third morning out at sea, a Naval Officer in his white uniform was roaming around the ship with a large steel spike belting things.

When he got to where I had spent the last two nights, I watched him belt this steel spike onto the base of where I had been sleeping. To my immediate horror he was able with very little effort to force his steel spike straight through. There was then a bloody big hole directly under my sleeping spot. It turned out this officer was on some kind of regular round, searching for rust in what we were later informed was this old rust bucket of a ship.

He immediately declared my small metal box out of bounds. Looking at me he ordered 'Don't under any circumstances get in it'.

I felt lucky that the floor of this box had not rotted away while I was sleeping on it resulting in me falling into the ocean and my absence not being discovered till next morning.

That is the nightmare from my trip in H.M.A.S. Sydney, that can still visit my dreams.

Will the recommendations of the Suicide Royal Commission end up disappearing without trace? (like so many other reports and recommendations)

The Royal Commission into Defence and Veteran Suicide has uncovered a disturbing lack of response by governments to previous reports and enquiries relevant to Defence and Veteran suicide.

The Royal Commission has found:

'We note the considerable number of previous reports delivered and inquiries conducted since 2000 that are relevant to the topics of suicide and suicidality among serving and ex-serving ADF members. We have identified over 50 previous reports, and more than 750 recommendations. While we acknowledge that many of these reports and inquiries were about discrete topics, we have been dismayed to come to understand the limited ways that Australian Governments have responded to these previous inquiries and reports.'

It is reassuring to have our own frustrating experience over the years recognised by this Royal Commission.

We must ensure that the final recommendations of this Royal Commission (to be published next year), are not delayed by being made the subject of some time wasting further enquiry or lost in some bureaucratic wasteland.

The Royal Commission too is well aware of these possibilities. To guarantee its recommendations do not conveniently disappear, the Royal Commission wants:

"We commissioners believe an enduring, powerful, independent body is necessary to hold government, the ADF, defence, DVA and other relevant agencies, as well as state and territory governments, to account, to make sure that they prioritise the major, long-term, complex reforms that are needed,"

"This body must not only be independent, it must have the confidence of serving and ex-serving ADF members and seek direct and significant input from them.

"It must be an oversight body but not one that usurps the leadership of the DVA or ADF, nor one that absolves that leadership of its primary responsibility for veterans' wellbeing.

"And it must have sufficient powers to deal with the issues it faces."

The government has tentatively agreed to establish such a body but we note with some alarm that no allowance was made for it in the last Federal budget.

We shall be looking for it in the next. ■

NATIONAL PRESIDENT'S REPORT

Recognition for our work by retiring DVA Commissioner And good news on travel concessions

For many years now, our VVFA, Australia wide, has helped veterans submit some 2,500 invalidity claims a year. Each such claim must be counted as only one, even though many have included more than one medical condition. (Unfortunately, some ex-service organisations have, until recently, against DVA policy, been basing their statistics on the total of conditions.)

The Federation's services have also included outreach tours to country areas where the expertise needed has not been available.

All over Australia, our welfare officers have been busy.

We also continue our 40 year history of campaigning for improvements in the Repatriation system (such as our successful campaign, with Blue Ryan of the TPI Federation, to fairly index the TPI pension).

The outgoing Repatriation Commissioner, Don Spinks AM has awarded us a Certificate of Appreciation for the work we do and have done.

These accomplishments did not come from nowhere.

The struggle to have Vietnam veterans' issues taken seriously began in the late 70s and early 80s.

Those struggles are now the subject of research and recording by Kel Robinson who kindly allows us to publish his papers as he is working.

Thank you Kel.

Some good news.

Many of us will have been frustrated by the differences between States in granting travel concessions to veterans. The differences have complicated interstate travel.

Recently, the matter was discussed at a meeting of Federal and State Veterans Affairs ministers. Here is an announcement by the Federal Minister.

'Ministers discussed opportunities for national harmonisation and mutual recognition of relevant identification documents, such as concession cards. Ministers agreed to work collaboratively towards this goal. ■

Don Greentree's role in The Ambush at Tua Thic

A battle Australia refused to recognise

My story begins on 29th May 1969 when I was back at the Fire Support Base (FSB).

The mortar crew consisting of four men including myself was hastily packed onto a mortar carrier and we found ourselves detached to 2 Troop, B Squadron, 3 Cavalry Regiment as part of OPERATION GARY OWEN in Area of Operations (AO) FROG led by Captain Tom Arrowsmith.

We set off at a great rate of speed heading to a destination unknown to us. Nor did we have an inkling of the trouble we were heading into.

Including our mortar track we had a total of 13 vehicles. I suppose if you were worrying about what may lie ahead, this was not a good sign.

Somewhere along the way we had acquired a number of infantry men from the 2nd D & E (Defence and Employment) Platoon, seven of whom were to stay with us.

On arrival at what we then knew to be the Viet Cong (VC)-friendly village of Thua Tich, or rather the stone or cement pillars gateway that was all that remained, Captain Arrowsmith split the group up, sending nine of the 13 carriers further north along the track in case of an attack from that direction.

This led the remaining four carriers, including the mortar track, to hide behind some very sparse scrub. The mortar track having the heaviest fire power and needing clear air around us to be able to fire, was given the prime position. As the photographs (see later) will clearly show, my carrier was almost completely in the open facing south along the track.

As we were setting up our arcs of fire, the seven men from the 2nd D & E platoon passed through us to set up an early warning post some 500 metres south along the track. This meant that our arcs of fire had to be easily recognised in the dark so that we would not be lobbing mortar bombs on to them (I did note too that they did not look the type that would be happy with that happening).

Along side us, separated by a few metres, was Captain Arrowsmith's command vehicle. Beside him on a bit of an angle was another fighting track, then to the rear was an engineers track.

(I note here that the battle report infers that my mortar track took very little part in the battle. As my story and photographs will show, this was wrong.)

Our little group set up its defences as best we could given the sparse amount of cover we had with a bank of 12 claymores directly in front of Captain Arrowsmith. The signal for 'all hell to break loose' was when, and if, he pressed the tit.

We then sat down to eat a cold meal of what ever rations we had brought with us and with night starting to fall, we, the mortar crew, planned with the crew of our carrier exactly what we were to do if the claymores were fired.

As the mortar crew cannot see over the sides of the carrier it was decided that I would stand and give fire directions as needed.

Let me first say here that the road was only about 20 feet in front of us.

A moonless night descended rather quickly as we stood-to in our various positions. All was still as though the whole country-side had stopped breathing.

I was looking South along the track that was a possible enemy approach. From my position I had a perfect uninterrupted view of not only the road but the entire grass area to our front where every tree and shrub had been removed for about 200 metres before the jungle commenced.

2000hrs came. Nothing. We thought we were in for a quiet night when, at 2030hrs, we heard the click of the radio and then the whispered message that a large group of heavily armed North Vietnamese Army (NVA) and Viet Cong (VC) were heading our way. Their assessment was a group of a minimum of 200.

Myself sitting behind the 50cal of the mortar track

Peering through the darkness with only the light of the stars, I saw three scouts coming along the road. They seemed to be doing a good job which worried me greatly. Behind them I could see the main body come four abreast and I quickly counted 125. I turned to look at Arrowsmith's vehicle and there were about 50 enemy now in the killing field.

The tit was pressed and all hell broke loose. Luckily for us most of the enemy turned and ran for the safety of the jungle two hundred metres away— if they had turned in at us we would have been in big strife.

We heard the boss calling for illumination so within seconds the whole area was lit up bright as day.

From there the mortar went into virtual self control and we were firing rounds no charge , straight up and down, as well as ranging out over what was now a very large battle field. Every so often we would throw up a star shell to keep the area illuminated.

(I note here that the battle report claimed hand held flares were responsible for illuminating the battle area. Some illumination was undoubtedly provided in this way, but it would simply not have made sense not to use mortar star shell that provided illumination 500 times greater than hand held flares.)

I saw sights that I will never forget as I looked out over the battle field. I saw one person crawling away dragging their intestines behind them until another round of fire ended their misery. I saw a figure stand and aim his weapon before he disappeared in a blaze of explosive light, hit directly by a mortar bomb. I saw bodies doing strange movements as 50cal rounds tore into them.

After some very hectic nerve shattering hours, well, only a bit more than 10 minutes really, the call came through to cease fire.

The sound of silence was deafening after the storm of noise from the last ten minutes. A quick round up of any injured was done and it turned out we had only one injury which, I understand, was a wound to the heel of a driver.

In the quiet of the aftermath we could hear the calling out of the enemy wounded and then, shortly after, the calling would stop.

We were so far out that we were beyond the range of artillery assistance so I believe that Captain Arrowsmith, at 2130hrs, was informed by Task Force HQ that a Spooky gunship aircraft was coming to our aid.

We had four men mark our perimeter by laying on their backs with a red filter on the torch pointing upwards. Next minute there was a noise like ripping cloth as bullets from spooky literally tore the jungle to shreds no more than a few feet out from us. Added to this was our mortar tube continuing sporadic fire which helped prevent, I believe, an enemy counter attack.

(Here again, I take exception to the battle report that stated twenty 81mm rounds were fired at the onset of the battle and a further ten 81mm High Explosive (HE) rounds fired as interdiction rounds throughout the rest of the night. In fact, we fired the first and last shot of the battle and fired over 60 rounds. Also, as far as I am aware, an 81mm mortar has never before been used in a killing group of an ambush. Yet not once does the battle report give any recognition to the mortar tube and crew.)

Shown two pages back is an official photograph taken as the resupply chopper came in. A close examination will reveal that the mortar track was in prime position facing the oncoming enemy.

We were on full stand too all night as we knew that only a short distance away was the remainder of the enemy force far outnumbering us. I honestly believe that if it had not been for Spooky and our mortar tube the enemy would have retaliated, and we would not have stood a chance.

Come first light we could hear the roar of the other APCs swooping down from the north and watched as they made a sweep out through the grass-lands. At the same time, the early warning team came in through the mortar position looking absolutely exhausted but you could see that if needed these seven men would be more than ready to fight to the end.

Conferences were called but being a lowly private I was not included in any part of these.

During this time a chopper landed with top brass, intelligence officers etc and the army photographer for the photo op.

An official photograph (one page back) shows myself sitting behind the 50cal of the mortar track cleaning my SLR at the same time. Pictured in the background is the chopper that brought in resups, the grass area all around is the battle ground and further off you can see the jungle starting again. I will say here that the mortar track had not moved since being positioned the evening prior to the battle, so it can again clearly be seen that we were in the prime position and definitely not in the rear position.

After one of these conferences with the team leaders etc, I saw Jimmy Riddle, who was in charge of the seven man 2nd D & E Platoon, go up to his men, have a bit of a talk and then go back to Captain Arrowsmith where a slightly heated discussion took place, I have no first hand knowledge of what that was about.

Captain Arrowsmith during dash to Xuyen Moc

Just after that the order was given that all the bodies of the enemy dead were to be buried near the village gate pillars.

[Editors' note: Don has provided photos showing a number of bodies of dead enemy which we have chosen not to reproduce.]

It was understandably decided not to stick around this enemy infested area. So a mad dash for the village of Xuyen Moc began (see photo above) with the mortar track being positioned towards the rear of the column. One of the tracks got tangled in barbed wire and had to stop to clear it. We stayed with that vehicle due to the fact that we had the heaviest fire power of all, and as soon as the wire was cleared we took off faster than the flying nun to meet up with the rest of the troop.

During that wild ride we had been hit twice with another five bodies being counted .

After returning home, I had nothing more to do with Thua Tich for a number of years until I happened to see a book in a department store with my photograph on the cover. Naturally I purchased the book, read it, noted all the discrepancies and attempted to set things right. This is when the s..t fight started.

I attempted to get in touch with the other members of the mortar team that were with me at Thua Tich but instead of them replying I received emails from DVA, from my old battalion and from Department of Defence telling me not to try and contact them as they wanted nothing to do with me.

This was like a red rag to a bull. So I spent a number of years writing to every member of parliament that I thought could help, even to my battalion mortar platoon pointing out that this should be on our battle honours as a mortar had never before been used in an ambush killing ground as well as the fact that it had played such a central role.

I received a reply saying that, as we were detached to 2 Cav, it had nothing to do with the battalion. They had even sent my letter to the battalion association and I received a rather curt message from them that it was obvious that I was trying to drum up some sort of glory for myself and to drop it.

I then contacted another person who had also been at the battle for advice. He was also trying to get recognition for his group.

Then it became apparent that even whether the battle itself ever took place was a matter of contention.

But between the two of us, over a 12 month period, we discovered that a couple awards had been handed out for the action (so some authority must have accepted that it did happen—it was a confusing situation).

Eventually after many letters back and forth with undeniable proof of our claim, we were able to communicate with the head of the Australian War Memorial (AWM) Dr Brendon Nelson. Letters of fact that we had been sending had, Dr Nelson confirmed, not been passed on to him.

In short he then initiated an investigation into the battle at Thua Tich, found that what we were presenting to him was factual and instigated the insertion of a diorama of the Battle of Thua Tich into the war memorial's Vietnam war section.

This no doubt forced the military to reluctantly admit that such an action had taken place.

I put forward this contention: That 19 Australian soldiers taking on in excess of 200 enemy, with no artillery support, and beating them, should be a battle remembered, not denied just to suit the military higher ups.

Actions that took place were not decisions made by the rank and file yet it is the rank and file yet again being shafted.

I have given here in this story my memories, which are as clear to me today as they were all those years ago. Many of the people I contacted—parliamentarians, journalists, shock jocks—all said the same. 'No one cares any more, it was so long ago'.

Well, I remember and I care.

This was one of the biggest battles that Australians had in Vietnam when taking into account our numbers and the vastly superior numbers of the enemy.

Because of the incorrect official report, those of us who fought the battle were denied our rightful recognition.

The mortar crew, I truly believe, played a major part of stopping the enemy from regrouping and overrunning us. Yet we were shafted badly in the battle report which wrongly stated that we were placed in the rear and took no important part in the battle. This wrong statement was made, even when photographic evidence showed that we were in the prime position directly facing the enemy and that our ranging across the battle field would have made it look as if there were two mortar tubes in action. Add to this us having fired in excess of 60 rounds during the battle and sporadic fire all night and the injustice of the official claim becomes clear.

Recognition, denied elsewhere, was eventually given by Dr Brendon Nelson of the Australian War Museum who confirmed that the battle at Thua Tich was one of the most significant battles that Australian troops fought in Vietnam due to the number of Australian troops facing the vastly superior NVA and VC forces. Yet, even to this day, there have been no commendations, no word of well done, just a very reluctant acceptance that a battle took place at Thua Tich.

Don Greentree. ■

THANKS FRANK

President of our NSW Branch, Frank Cole, retires after many years helping veterans and their families.

We will miss him.

Extract from an address by National President Bill Roberts OAM, 11/10/23.

As many of you here today will recall Frank joined the NSW State branch at Granville as a volunteer in 2003, after having been in the workforce for 42 years but forced to leave due to his service related disabilities and illnesses, (like many of us here today).

He was adamant that his service related medical problems would not prevent him from doing something useful with his life following his medical retirement, and wisely, I believe, he chose to perform voluntary work with one of the best ESOs in Australia to assist his fellow veterans and their families.

He brought with him management and administrative skills and experience that would later be beneficial to the overall running of the organisation at Granville and the handling of disputes and problem solving within the NSW State branch.

Frank's initial activity with the Branch at Granville in 2003 was that of Membership Officer. He also assisted the State Secretary with some functions.

In 2004 he was elected as a member of the State Branch Committee where he was actively involved, contributing positively to much of its decision making processes.

In 2007 Frank was elected as the Honorary Secretary, a position he held until 2015. During this period he earned the respect and confidence of not only the members of the State Branch headquarters, but also those of our Sub-Branches, for the professionalism and administrative abilities he displayed.

In January 2015 Frank was elected as the President of the State Branch following the sudden death of Tim McCombe OAM, a position Frank has held since then.

Frank, I personally, and no doubt the rest of us here, will genuinely miss your guidance and leadership and your great personality. Thank you for your commitment to the branch members and families for the past twenty years – Well done that man. ■

Please support this important study.
It will undoubtedly help the future care of our children and grandchildren as well as the children of the veterans of other wars.

Bill Roberts OAM, National President, VVFA

Volunteers wanted.

Children of veterans are an overlooked group in Australian research and the long-term effects of growing up with a parent who has seen active service are not well understood.

I am the daughter of a Vietnam Veteran, a mental health accredited social worker and a PhD Candidate with Charles Sturt University. I am researching the impact that having a Vietnam Veteran father has on wellbeing in adulthood. I hope that this research will help to improve support services to children and families of all service personnel.

I am looking for volunteers who are children of Vietnam veterans to be interviewed about their experiences across their lifespan.

Criteria: Your father must have deployed to Vietnam with the Australian Army as part of his operational service, and you must have lived most of your childhood in the same home as him.

Please note, I am not funded by or associated with any government organisation and this research project has been approved following a rigorous application process by Charles Sturt University and the Human Research Ethics Committee (Ethics approval number: H23571).

How will the 'harmonising of the three compensation schemes' affect Vietnam veterans

'What the hell does all that mean', you may well ask.

Well, here's a go at an explanation.

Presently, there are three veterans' disability compensation schemes. They have been established at different times for different purposes.

But when a veteran wants to lodge a disability claim, the first thing the Pension Officer must do is identify under which scheme the claim belongs.

This causes a delay for obvious reasons but particularly because a veteran's claim may fall under more than one scheme.

When DVA receives the claim from the Pension Officer, there is a similar delay.

Over three years ago, the Productivity Commission recommended the three schemes be harmonised into one. For years before that, the VVFA and other ex-service organisations were making the same recommendation.

Even after the Productivity Commission's recommendation, DVA just dawdled on; nothing much happened.

It has been the Royal Commission into Defence and Veteran Suicide which has put a rocket up DVA and spurred them into action.

How will this effect Vietnam veterans?

The answer is, 'not a lot', because if you are receiving compensation under an existing scheme that will remain unchanged.

But in a year or two, after the harmonised scheme is in place, any new claim will be judged under the new scheme..

New Vietnam veterans' claims may be for Extreme Disablement Adjustment (EDA) (a TPI like payment for those ineligible for a TPI because of their age) or they may be for upgrades to existing General Rate pensions.

And here's the rub. DVA refuses to guarantee that outcomes of such claims under the harmonised scheme will leave the claimant no worse off than under the old arrangements.

Indeed, the harmonised scheme could leave new Vietnam veteran claimants worse off than had they been claiming before the change.

That, surely, is unfair, unnecessary and, indeed, sheer bastardry.

And what of the advice being given by veterans?

There is a committee of highly experienced ESO representatives giving advice to DVA.

In the best DVA tradition however, DVA will not tell those committee members what it is recommending to government; so they don't know whether their advice has been heeded, and are not given the chance to question those DVA recommendations.

In other words, it is a sham consultation.

But the existence of the veterans' advisory committee may allow the Minister when making his 'harmonisation' announcement to say something to effect that 'there has been wide and lengthy consultation with the veteran community', falsely suggesting veterans' approval.

Sadly, we've seen it all before. ■

Vietnam Veterans' Stories

From letters diaries and memories

Another (but different) Canungra Story (a tribute to the clip-board)

by Paul Davidson

Having just read Ian Granland's experience at Canungra, I must report mine was completely different. Ian was in the same initial Police Training Class 111 and there were a few others in that class who were conscripted and served in Vietnam, namely Peter Poulton one of the organisers of the Welcome Home Parade, Greg Masters 7 RAR and others.

I was based at 3 Cav Holsworthy and some of us were sent to Canungra with the 1st Armoured Regiment from Puckapunyal. We were picked up by a bus with them, no pushing the bus (as in Ian's story) but the driver would not stop so anyone needing to relieve themselves had to stand at the open door on the move.

We were assigned four-man tents you could just stand up in and commenced training doing contact drills.

I was carrying the M60 in a creek bed when a contact drill started. As instructed I ran up to the high ground and was running along the top when the ground disappeared and I ended up upside down in a tree. One thing in my favour, I did not let go of the M60.

Next thing the instructor was yelling to me to get up to the high ground. I told him I had been.

It turned out another classmate from the Police, Greg Masters was playing the enemy.

The next day I jumped off a rock and rolled my ankle spraining it. After seeing the medic I was sent to the cook house to work. So while the others were running around, jumping off towers and crawling through the mud I was peeling spuds and keeping the coffers full of water.

I thought this was pretty cushy except for this Warrant Officer from the Armoured Regiment who did his course carrying round a clipboard giving me a task every time he walked past, especially if I was sitting down having a smoke. It didn't matter if I had just peeled 10 tons of spuds.

One time he got me to rake even lines around the tents like a Japanese Garden. Another time the fire buckets which were on poles outside each tent had to be emptied, cleaned and filled up with fresh water. I was only a trooper so I thought he must know fresh water puts out fires better than stale water. I was jack of this.

One of my jobs was to keep the coffers in the cook house topped up with water. I got two buckets half filled with water (I never wanted to lift too much) then every time I saw him coming I got up and pretended to be topping up the coffers. I never got another job from him.

Speaking of Jack, he was a 40-year-old Corporal in the same tent as me and pleaded to let him know how I was managing to get out of the training as it was killing him. I could only tell him it had taken me years to figure it out. So my ankle got better and back out I went and I got to do a few things and pass chucking a grenade into a supposed bunker.

Then, you wouldn't believe it, I jumped off another rock landing on my good ankle and sprained it so no more humping a pack for me (I did suffer from numerous sprained ankles when growing up)

Ian spoke of the exercise of crawling along with the Vickers Machine Guns firing over their heads. When our lot had to do it I was with the guns, I think they had three of them, however, they were fixed so they could not be depressed. I was assisting in feeding the belt, it appeared the rounds were going into the men on the ground and there was panic. But it was just the burning tracer falling out of the back of the round which gave the impression it was the round hitting the ground. You just can't rely on WW2 ammo. Same went with the WW2 underwear issued at Kapooka.

So it was time for the bush exercise to take place I was given the task of operating a rear link radio on top of a mountain and told to go to the Q Store and get some rations.

The QM behaved as though he was paying for them himself. I was given a blanket and some 24-hour rations packs. I thought bugger him so I kept a conversation going during which time I asked him if I could take an empty ration tin to put my blanket in so it never got wet. When I got the OK I inadvertently picked up a full can of rations packs and was on my way.

I was driven by truck to where the radio was and a tent had been erected, so whilst the others humped packs and down mountains I lay in the sun reading books and enjoying plenty of coffee and food.

I did manage to pass the course as nobody failed on a Unit Course, so that was my slog at Canungra.

I did have fun coming back on the bus and telling my mates how hard I had done it.

I did learn one important lesson. The power of the Clip Board, when I was back at my Squadron I acquired a clipboard and wrote a lot of numbers on it. When not doing exercises or training we were given silly tasks to keep us busy. I used to go to the barracks and have a nap in someone's room and if a Sergeant or Officer came around to catch anyone skiving off I would jump up and when asked what I was doing I would claim I was counting fire extinguishers or similar for the Q Store and get told to carry on, which I did by laying down again.

FROM THE EDITORS DESK

RSL Apology to Vietnam Veterans

Many Vietnam veterans, although not all by any means, felt a lack of respect from the RSL after the war.

Some were confronted by RSL members accusing them of not being in a real war and that they had no reason to exhibit war related illnesses.

And there is no doubt the RSL failed to support Vietnam veterans in their campaign to have Agent Orange and other chemical exposure recognised. Indeed the RSL supported the government against the Vietnam veterans' efforts even opposing the establishment of a Royal Commission to examine the issue.

So when NSW RSL President Ray James, on the eve of Vietnam Veterans Day marking the 50th Anniversary of the end of the war, offered an apology for these instances of rejection, it was well received.

However, it should be noted that Ray is himself a Vietnam veteran. It means he was offering an apology to himself. An apology has never come from the perpetrators of the offending behaviour.

DVA Backlog

There has not been much progress in reducing the backlog.

As at 30 October 2023 there were 75,937 veterans' disability claims received by DVA on which no decision has been made.

The time taken from the submission of a claim till a decision is made is a bit either side of a year depending of the type of claim.

That remains a huge number of unprocessed claims and an unreasonably long wait for decisions to be made.

The Royal Commission into Defence and Veteran Suicide has identified these unreasonable waiting times as increasing the risk of veterans committing suicide.

It is true that DVA is trying hard to catch up, but the question remains how could they have allowed this situation to develop when a post Afghanistan war surge of claims was wholly predictable (and was predicted by the VVFA).

Suicide Royal Commission

The Royal Commission produced an interim report on 11 August 2022.

DVA published: Update on Implementation of Interim Report of the Royal Commission into Defence and Veteran Suicide on its web-site in June 2023.

There have been no further updates on the DVA web-site since then.

This is disappointing, and lends weight to Commissioner Nick Kaldas's complaint that the Royal Commission is not getting whole hearted support from DVA (see earlier article, 'How Could It Come To This').

This Royal Commission deals with life and death decisions of our veterans. DVA must take it seriously and keep us advised on its remedial actions.

DVA must do better.

Captain Paul Jones served in the Artillery Tactical Headquarters at Nui Dat in 1967:

‘By August-September 1967 there was a general concern around the HQ that mines were being lifted from the minefield. My understanding also was that Brigadier Graham shared the concern that mines were being lifted. I recall being asked to include likely approaches to the minefield in the Regiment’s H&I program.’

A week or so before Graham relinquished command of 19 October, he told a journalist: ‘Charlie may take some time to admit it, but he is virtually finished in Phuoc Tuy Province. He has lost the people and resources, and without these he cannot live.’ The 1ATF H&I program powerful verification that these were anxiety driven last words. Despite the confident tone of his remarks, he knew what was happening in the minefield.’

In Professor Smith's eyes the credibility of the Evatt Report was established by the glowing endorsement it received from Sir Richard Doll, regarded as the world's leading epidemiologist since his work in the 1950s linking smoking with lung cancer. Doll's praise for Evatt's work, however, was given in 1985, and took no account of the later studies that increased the level of uncertainty surrounding possible links between herbicides and cancer. Further, Smith either did not know, or chose not to state, that Doll was being paid a retainer by Monsanto at the time he endorsed the Evatt Report.

Good news for veterans of RIFLE COMPANY BUTTERWORTH Recognition of Service

The Defence Honours Awards Appeals Tribunal hearing into the Australian Army's Rifle Company Butterworth

Australian Government

Defence Honours and Awards Appeals Tribunal

Minister for Defence Personnel and Veterans' Affairs
Parliament House
CANBERRA ACT 2600

Dear Minister

On 7 April 2022 your predecessor, the Hon Andrew Gee MP, directed the Defence Honours and Awards Appeals Tribunal to inquire into and report on medallic recognition for service by members of the Australian Defence Force with Rifle Company Butterworth (RCB) during the period from 1970 to 1989.

The Tribunal's report of the inquiry is attached.

After detailed research far more extensive than that conducted on any prior occasion, whether by Defence or by independent reviews and inquiries, the Tribunal has concluded that RCB service was neither 'peacetime' (as currently, but not earlier, contended by Defence) nor 'warlike' (as claimed by RCB veterans), but was actually 'non-warlike' by reference to Government policy first enunciated in 1993 and not since changed on any properly informed basis.

As such, RCB service is currently and appropriately recognised by the award of the Australian Service Medal 1945-1975 or the Australian Service Medal and does not meet the eligibility criteria for the Australian Active Service Medal 1945-1975 or the Australian Active Service Medal. But, as such, it should now be formally accepted as 'non-warlike service' under the Veterans' Entitlements Act 1986 and receive more beneficial claims treatment than that currently afforded – this would be consistent with a 2007 Ministerial decision supported at that time by Defence but not then implemented by Defence on behalf of the then Minister as statutorily required.

While these are the key findings of the Tribunal inquiry, a number of other consequential or systemic recommendations are contained in the attached report.

Yours sincerely

Vietnam Veterans' Stories

From letters diaries and memories

You might be surprised what David got up to on his R & C

by Sig David Calderwood

(And of other events in his time as a Nasho)

I was a 20-year-old living in a small suburb of Bankstown called Birrong southwest of Sydney. In this area were mostly fibro houses and blue-collar workers.

I registered on the 31st of March 1968 for National Service. I was not expecting induction into the army as my first 14 years of life were not so healthy.

I was born with jaundice and adenoids problems. Both adenoids were removed and I was in and out of hospital for the first year of my life.

Being unable to keep anything down, my mother took me to a Tresillian Family Care Centre at Little Bay NSW. I think she hoped they would give guidance for my recovery. Otherwise I think she thought I would die.

For the next 14 years I had asthma, sinus, hay-fever, double pneumonia, tonsils, appendix, German measles, and shingles. A family doctor would come every day and give me a jab in the bum of penicillin. (In those days, house calls by doctors were common).

So even though my health improved somewhat after my 14th year and even though I had taken up some sport and rode my bike, I was not expecting to pass the medical for National Service.

My medical assessment was in April 1968. When I arrived, I encountered some very weird 'goings-on'. About six blokes were waiting to be assessed. Four of the group seemed to be mates. Me and another bloke were the other two, just sitting quietly for our turns.

One of the four mates had come into the room huffing and puffing from running, hoping I suppose to raise his blood pressure and heartbeat. Another one had strong eyeglasses on with one mate joking, he didn't need glasses. Another one had a cast on his arm, hoping they would dismiss him straight away, and another dressed very poorly saying he had to work very hard to feed his family.

These were not your regular good citizen volunteers.

As well as my history of ill-health, I had flat feet like my father who missed the Second World War because of it. My father ended up working at the De Havilland Company helping to make Mosquito Planes during the war.

Save our Sons silent protest outside Addison Road Military Depot

Anyway, the first thing the doctor said to me was, 'take your shoes off and I'll take your height'. My height was 5 feet, four- and three-quarter inches while the reject height was 5 feet, two inches. As I was into sport the doctor ignored my flat feet.

He was ticking off a list of questions of medical things that I had filled out. He said to me, nobody should be still living with all your 'Yes' ticks. I think he was thinking I was telling him the untruths. A couple weeks later I received a letter asking me to visit my family doctor to confirm my asthma and sinus. My doctor indicated to me, he would write anything I would want on the form, but not wanting to live with a lie for the rest of my life, I asked him to write the truth that I don't have asthma as an adult and sinus problems only occasionally.

The next letter from the department said report to Marrickville Army Centre, which is in the inner west of Sydney, on the 2nd of October 1968, for the 14th intake of the two year National Service.

Being a typical miner and Labor voter, my dad really didn't like me being called up at all. He tried to get me to think up excuses. But we had a good honest family life being taught to not cheat or lie about things. 'You take your medicine and get on with it'. So Dad was not really displeased, but sorry that I was going. He took a day off work to take me to the Induction Army Centre. This was the first time he ever took a day off work.

When we arrived all the protesters from 'Save our Sons' and 'Baby Killers' had gathered. A woman came towards me and waved this feather under my face. I didn't know what was going on and what to do. I was a bit anxious about getting through the gate, but she waved this thing at me and started yelling at me about white feathers, save our sons, baby killers and all this stuff. Dad just pushed her, and she nearly fell over. I've never seen him so aggressive like that before. He said, 'don't ever come and say that to my son.' I kissed him goodbye and went inside. I think, despite his misgivings, he was quietly proud that I was going in and doing my duty.

After the hassle from the 'Save our Sons' and 'Baby Killers' protesters we finally made it inside to the Induction Centre. No way I had any idea what was going to happen next. It was our first experience, to be often repeated, of 'Hurry up and wait.'

We had to strip down to our undies for the old cough treatment, height, weight, photos, academic questions, and any relevant information team of doctors required.

Just before me, was this bloke dressed in a blue jumper, jeans, motorcycle boots, and long hair down passed his collar. He looked like he needed a good wash of course, and when he stripped, he didn't have any undies on, so they provided a towel. As he took his jumper off, he had a leather vest with the insignia and colours of the 'Hells Angels' bikers club. That put the wind up a few of the army officials and they treated him like royalty.

After a few hours of prodding and questioning, we were then loaded onto trucks and transferred to Singleton army camp for recruit training. As I mentioned, we were the 14th Intake National Service.

The Hells Angel bloke ended up in my quarters and we made him our captain to keep any slackers in our group on their toes and to make our soldiering smooth.

It was a very interesting 10 weeks of recruit training. First we were called to the barber to get our haircuts which was like a crew cut. We had to wear old used uniforms and surplus World War 2 and Korean War boots until we got our proper fitted uniforms and boots. We had lot of needles and attended the dentist a few times. Lots of running, PT work, learning to shoot weapons (SLR) on the rifle range, tossing grenades, doing drill work, field craft, and long physical march/runs with webbing and rifle.

I wanted to give it my best shot as I wanted to prove to people that I wasn't that sickly kid anymore, although I struggled in some of the physical things. I'm only short and when you are running with big blokes, they take twice your step, so your legs must rotate twice as fast to keep up with them.

We even had to fight bush fires in the area and walk back through paddocks of farms to get back to camp as the trucks couldn't pick us up. We also had a soldier that nearly lost his finger on the ropes and measles ripped through some of our group. In the end we all survived and succeeded and became well trained soldiers for war or at least for "the powers that be".

Vietnam (We had a plan)

While in Vietnam, I had my R&R (Rest and Recuperation) in Hong Kong with a mate nickname Tree in October 1970.

I was due to go home on the 19th of November along with three mates, Tree, Kenny, and our cook Eber. But before that, the four of us went for several days on R&C (Rest and Convalescence) to Vung Tau together with a Sergeant and another Sig.

'We had a plan' what to do with our time while on R&C.

On the day we departed for our R&C, we got on the morning convoy from Nui Dat to Vung Tau where we were dropped off at the Peter Badcoe Club which was the R&C centre. After our arrival we checked in our SLR rifles to the Armoury. We then packed two army bags with extra greens and one set of civvie clothes for each of us. We then headed off to the RAAF Base.

During that year we got to know some of the RAAF blokes from the Gunship choppers who would often have lunch at our mess.

The next day we hopped on a truck with our two new mates and went to Bearcat.

(Honestly, I don't know why they wanted to eat our army food.) Because of our friendships with these RAAF blokes, many of the Sigs would occasionally take the last chopper of the afternoon down to Vungers, to have a few grogs at the RAAF base boozier, and then in the morning catch the first chopper back to Nui Dat. Easy!

That evening we had a great time. Kenny our organiser said tomorrow morning we will catch a Dakota or such plane to Saigon. Bright and early in the morning we checked in and jumped on a plane to Saigon. A three-star US general on the flight commented to us that he had a lot of respect for us Aussie soldiers. We said thanks but didn't mention that we were AWOL on our R&C.

Now you might ask why we were taking this journey. Well, Kenny had a mate Barry Coe who he knew in civvy street and was posted to 8 RAR. Barry was seriously wounded and was recovering at the Long Binh US Military hospital. (Barry was later awarded a MM-Military Medal. He should have been awarded with a bigger gong for his bravery). We all knew him from his visits to 104

Signal Sqn while he was back at the Dat. I was the one who broke the news to Kenny after I saw a Noticas (Notice of casualties) while I was on shift in the CommCen (Communication Centre).

After walking around downtown Saigon for a while and thinking should we go to the Australian Hotel Quarters. We decided not to as it was too much of a big risk of being caught, so we boarded a yank army bus to Long Binh.

On the bus journey we met a couple of yank soldiers and got talking. They said come to our quarters and we will set you all up, so we went with them. Long Binh, a sprawling large base where you could get lost easily.

Kenny went off to see his mate Barry while we had a few drinks and a quick nap. Our two new yank mates told us they were heading to the US FSB Bearcat in the morning to deliver equipment and asked us if we wanted to come. Why the hell not!!

Kenny came back and said Barry was doing OK. The next day we hopped on a truck with our two new mates and went to Bearcat. It was a bit different to Long Binh and maybe smaller than

Bearcat Base

Nui Dat.

The talk was American comedian Bob Hope was doing a show that night, so we thought we better not attend as it was too much of a risk by being a long way from Vung Tau where we should have been. All we did for the evening, was have a few beers, and bunk down with our yank mates.

But time was marching on and we needed to get back to Vungers, so our American friends dropped us off outside Bearcat at a dangerous and frightening intersection with one road heading towards Vung Tau. Our anxiety was extremely high, wondering how we can get back to Vungers.

A South Korean truck stopped and asked if we wanted a lift, but we declined as their truck was near full and hardly any room for the four of us. We waited about an hour or so when a truck came along with two black American soldiers. They offered us a ride to Vung Tau and without any hesitation we climbed aboard.

The trip was without any worries as we passed through little Hamlets, villages, blown-up bridges and at times suspicious looking groups of people. The two Americans in the front had Afro haircuts with bush hats on and they were smoking rolled up cigarettes with a strange smell. We think it was dope, anyway we arrived back safely at the American PX (Postal Exchange) store, where we bought some cheap bourbon and moved over to the RAAF base to celebrate without being caught. The next morning, we rolled up to the R&C centre, checked out our SLR rifles and joined the convoy back to the Dat.

We had achieved our 'We had a plan' R&C

We kept our little adventurous trip to ourselves until we got home. Eber (our cook) has passed on but Kenny, Tree and I always talk about it at our reunions, and on ANZAC days.

I met some top blokes who've been close friends for all these years. When you go to war you really get to know people, you live with them in a tent for twelve months. Great experience and I really have got some good results from it. Did things in the army that I most probably would never do.

Dad used to tell all his mates down at the Bowling Club all the time that Dave's been to Vietnam. I would go down and have dinner with him and his mates sometimes and they'd all be shaking my hand. Dad was very proud.

Post My Military Service

I was discharged from the army on the 1st of January 1971 and the next day I married Raema on the 2nd of January. We went on our honeymoon to Norfolk Island and when I returned, I went back to work with the Taxation Department in Sydney, my previous job before I entered the Army. I built a house at Emu Plains and moved into the house in July 1973 and in August 1974, I joined the Penrith City Council. I had my first child Richard born in 1977 and my second child Saranne in 1979.

My wife Raema got sick in 1997 and passed away in June 1998. I took leave in 1997/98 to look after her. I resigned from my job with the Council in September 1998 and became a fully TPI pensioner. In 2004 I met my second wife Gwen. I moved in with her in 2005 and married in 2017.

Dear Editor,

I read with interest, as usual, the July 2023 THE VIETNAM VETERANS' NEWSLETTER. As usual there is plenty of interest in what I feel is the very best of the ex-service publications in Australia. However, there is an article that particularly caught my attention.

The article on Page 65 by my mate Bill Roberts OAM JP, AUSTRALIAN ENTERTAINERS IN SOUTH VIETNAM (A memoriam to the late Lorrae Desmond AM MBE) in compliment with the very good tribute by Sylvia Raye starting on Page 76.

I saw Lorrae Desmond with ABC Band in the 1967 Concert in the natural Amphitheatre on the eastern side of Nui Dat hill, and it was a pretty wild, highly entertaining affair.

What I am writing about is with the Australian lady entertainers that went to entertain the troops in Vietnam, is that my cousin Pat (Wordsworth) Kennedy, who went under the name of Big Pretzel, never seems to get a mention when the Australian Lady entertainers are mentioned. Pat was the first of the lady entertainers to go to Vietnam, entertaining the 1 R.A.R. Battlegroup at Bien Hoa on 19 January 1967. There are plenty of photographs of her at that concert in the AWM PHOTO DATA Collection. She also returned to Vietnam in 1968.

Yours Faithfully
Ross Wood
ex-5 R.A.R.

[Editors Note:]

Between 1967 and 1971, some 50 of troupes of entertainers left Australia for Vietnam. Some, like Lucky Starr, the first to tour, paid his own way, sparking an effort to get touring groups sanctioned and protected.

On 20th July 1969 Cathy Wayne Catherine Anne Warnes (7 December 1949 – 20 July 1969), professionally Cathy Wayne, was an Australian singer and dancer, who was killed during a tour of Vietnam at a United States Marine Base where she was hosting a music concert to entertain the troops during the Vietnam War. Wayne had just finished a song at a Non-commissioned officer's club near Da Nang in South Vietnam when she was hit by a bullet fired from a .22 pistol, fitted with a silencer. Wayne was the first Australian woman killed during the Vietnam War.

The next day the news of the world was focused on Neil Armstrongs walk on the moon, and Cathy's death went almost forgotten. No-one was found guilty of the killing.

Do you remember Ray Fulton?

Do you remember Ray Fulton?

He contributed so much to our Federation and to veterans' welfare in general.

This book, amongst other things, is about him.

If you remember Ray, we invite you to write a letter-to-the-editor with your memories.

As I drifted about [at the Granville office, I saw that the volunteer advisors each had their own style, just as Ray had told me in Darling Harbour. One was quiet, focused on pen to paper, another joked and spread his hands. It was triage work. They listened and decided what was needed: accommodation, money, food, medical help. Nearly always, they set the guy on the path to repatriation benefits, which meant supplying contacts for psychiatrists. As volunteers, they worked as much as they wished, every day or once a month.

It's part of our own therapy, they all told me. We've been there.

As they helped each other wind down a little , it granted them enough slack to be able to help the next guy wind down too.

One guy said to me, they wound us up with all that training, but they didn't wind us down. They were working out how to do that themselves. ■

It is that time again when annual membership renewals are due.

Members of our various State Branches and sub branches should receive membership renewal notices from their respective organisations.

NSW membership subscription renewal forms for 2024 have already been sent out to NSW Branch members under separate cover by the Granville office. In the event you do not receive a form in the mail you can use the Membership Renewal form included in this Newsletter or the one available on our web site at www.vvfagranville.org

To renew your membership, just complete the membership form you receive and return it to your State Branch, Sub Branch or, for NSW Branch members, to the Granville office. Please check the Membership Application form to ensure your details are correct and amend any incorrect details so we can update our records.

Once again, all members of the NSW Branch, who renew by 30 January 2023, will have the chance to enter into the draw to win 1 of 3, $100.00 gift vouchers from Bunnings Hardware.

In addition, NSW Branch Members who renew by as early as 31 December 2023, will also have the opportunity to go into the draw for a $250.00 gift voucher.

So, NSW Branch members, get your application in quickly to Granville to ensure you don't miss out on both these great opportunities. Cheques and money orders from NSW Branch members can be made payable to VVPPAA NSW.

Your financial support in the past has been most appreciative and we hope you will continue to support the Association and therefore assist our fellow Veterans and Service members in need.

It is through our membership subscriptions, fund raising activities and the many kind donations we receive from members that we are able to meet our increasing welfare/pension workload. Should you be able to help with a donation in this regard it would be greatly appreciated.

We look forward to receiving your renewal for 2024 and thank you for your on-going support and patronage of the Federation.

Ron O'Connor JP

A MESSAGE FROM THE NSW BRANCH

Once again, we say THANK YOU to our many members who have made a financial donation to their State Branch.

Without these donations we would find it much more difficult to cater to the needs of our war veterans, service and ex-service persons generally. Whilst all donations are gratefully received, and combined are of enormous assistance to us, they are too numerous to list. However, periodically, we will publish a list of individual NSW Branch members who have donated amounts of $200 or more.

Generous supporters of the NSW Branch since the last Journal are:

$1,000	Gordon Davison, Anthony Mills, Anonymous (2)
$500	Anonymous (2)
$350	Xuan Hy Trinh
$300	Geoffrey Graham
$200	Peter Miller, Anonymous

Whilst the above refers to, mostly, individual donations only, we are also indebted to the many RSL sub-branches and other licensed clubs who generously contribute to our cause.

Thank you very much for your kind support.

Vietnam Veteran's Day acknowledgements:

We would also like to thank the following Clubs, Businesses and individuals who generously donated prizes towards our 2023 Vietnam Veterans' Day raffle.

The raffle was a great success and all profits from it will be used to assist current and former ADF personnel and their families in time of need.

Thank you to all who gave so generously, and any we have failed to list here, we humbly apologise, and will indeed ensure you are so noted in our next issue, March 2024.

This being my final chance to comment, I will just say what a pleasure it has been working alongside my colleague, and NSW President, Frank Cole. I wish Frank and Sue all the very best in the next phase of their lives, relaxing and healthy. I am sure, speaking on behalf of the rest of the volunteers at Granville, that you will be sorely missed, but know just how much you and Sue deserve a peaceful retirement, and we all wish you both every happiness.

WVAA HISTORY DRAFTS - Article 10

The Early Action Association —

Context Is Everything

This instalment is one of three looking at the reasons why active supporters of the Vietnam Veterans Action Association committed to the new organisation in very late 1979 and early 1980. It looks at pointers to the harmful consequences of war-time chemical exposure.

“One of the most important aspects of the study of history is to understand the context in which a given set of events occurred. — Jeffrey Grey, in Zombie Myths of Australian Military History.

Earlier articles in this series have detailed how veterans in most Australian states and territories moved to establish organisations that were, in effect, branches of the Vietnam Veterans Action Association. (Newsletter readers who’d like to see any of these accounts can contact the author via the email address at the end of this article.)

Following John Harper’s call for an organisation to lobby for compensation for illnesses and child deformities, and Bernie Szapiel and Holt McMinn’s announcement that they were forming an organisation to secure both an inquiry and compensation, someone in most State and Territory capital cities acted as a point of contact for other concerned veterans and their wives. Typically, an informal gathering or two took place before a more formal public meeting at which office bearers and functions were decided upon.

It is clear that newspapers, read by very large numbers of Australians in the late 1970s and early 1980s, played an important role in publicising most of the early efforts to organise. Articles about Vietnam veterans’ health problems and about the abnormalities and illnesses of their children attracted the attention of other veterans and their wives. Those articles often included the contact details of key individuals (or information enabling them to be easily contacted) and detailed veterans’ efforts to organise, both locally and elsewhere. A promotional advertisement placed by the Action Association in major newspapers in mid-January 1980 provided information to individuals unaware of developments. In addition, other media publicised health concerns and broadcast interviews with concerned ex-servicemen. Word of mouth in the form of telephone contacts further assisted veterans to gather.

As has been shown in previous articles, the organisational responses at the beginning were not all the same. Vietnam veterans in Western Australian opted to form a special sub-branch of the RSL. Northern Territory veterans formed an organisation that was both an Action Association Branch and part of the RSL (without being a sub-branch). Tasmanians opted to wait and see, content to persist with their South-East Asian Veterans Association until the new mainland group had demonstrated staying power (and until Vietnam veterans' issues looked to be of a distinct sort). The earliest ACT organisation adopted the Action Association brand but may not have participated in collective deliberations until later in 1980. NSW, Vic, SA and QLD formed groups that were part of a national alliance under the Action Association umbrella, although there is only slim evidence of coordinated effort by members of that coalition in early 1980, after Melbourne meetings of representatives from different States took place on 2 January and 10 January. The absence of arrangements for the alignment of Branch activities and of easy means of multi-branch communication – phone calls were expensive and there was no internet – were to be problematic for years thereafter.

Interesting though the initial organising steps of veterans in 1980 are – particularly, in the way outcomes differed from place to place – it is the reasons behind the actions of the different players in this period that are more intriguing and, in some ways, even more complex.

The reason most commonly provided by Association officials in the 1980s and beyond for the existence of the Association (and by implication for the foundation actions of key Association figures) was that the RSL didn't care about the post-war problems of Vietnam veterans. More particularly, it was claimed that the League hadn't, at this early juncture, acted on concerns about chemical exposure and hadn't supported veterans' call for an investigation into (or compensation for) ill-health thought to have been caused by wartime chemical exposure. This position is consistent with early statements by Szapiel and McMinn. Arising from it is the view that the RSL's inaction more or less forced Szapiel and McMinn to announce the formation of a Vietnam veteran-specific organisation, thereby providing the impetus for the founding of branches in other States.

The view that the RSL wasn't at all supportive in the period between March 1979 and the end of Feb 1980 isn't entirely true but even if it was, and the occasionally supportive statements from the RSL National President are ignored, a lack of care on the League's part doesn't explain why key figures in this very early period, other than Szapiel and McMinn, acted to support the fledgling Association. It doesn't explain why, in the first few months, other veterans and their wives became active supporters i.e., were doing more than attending a foundation meeting and paying a membership fee. After all, key figures could well have responded to the prevailing circumstances in other ways.

It is very clear that Szapiel acted out of longstanding desperation at the repatriation system's failure to deal with his medical problems. He was dissatisfied, too, with the actions (such as they were) of the RSL National President, William Keys, after Keys' March 1979 admission that the League had been aware of a possible chemical/illness link "for some years". McMinn shared Szapiel's frustration. Other early active members may also have committed to the Association out of frustration and on impulse. Desperation, driven by the persistent nature of illnesses, by dissatisfaction with the repatriation system, by inexplicable miscarriages, and by child illnesses and deformities (complemented in some instances by post-war 're-adjustment' problems), doubtless caused some individuals and families to attach themselves to the new State organisations. But there exists a range of other plausible motivations for commitment beyond simple membership.

For historians keen to understand the motives of the earliest active members of the new organisation, the challenge is not just with locating and talking to surviving members of the cohort but with the fact that memories of particular periods in time are notoriously difficult to pinpoint. In addition, veterans' recollections of early 1980 are inevitably shaped by events from later in the decade. For example, active members' recollections of the RSL in the establishment period are inevitably shaped by later perceptions of the League.

The group's president, Mr Bernard Szapiel, said the movement had begun because of the Returned Services League's "inactivity" over the defoliant, called Agent Orange.

Because of this melding of recollections from different times, and the shaping power of later events, there can only be speculation about the motives of the earliest active members based on the few relevant public pronouncements from late 1979/early 1980 and based on careful examination of the context of unfolding events.

It's conceivable, of course, that some of the active early proponents of the Action Association gave their support simply because the organisation was one principally of (and for) those who had served in Vietnam or because they saw themselves as having few other channels for pursuing the rectification of their grievances; they doubtless saw the focus of the Association as one more closely aligned to their needs than that of alternative ex-service organisations. Similarly, it is possible that there were active early figures who aided the cause out of sympathy for the circumstances of more troubled veterans and their families despite scepticism about chemical harms and doubts about the likelihood of appropriate compensation. It seems more likely, though, that where a decision was made in early 1980 to become an active member of the Action Association, it was a multi-part one, whether consciously 'stepped through' or not.

Underpinning active commitment in the earliest months of 1980 was a likely belief that chemical exposure was (or at least could be) the cause of health problems in veterans or their families or of health problems yet to surface for them, such that there should be an official investigation and compensation.

Further underpinning active support for the new organisation was a probable belief in the merits of organising or of collective effort. This belief was likely to be complemented by a view that collective pressure would need to be applied to the Federal Government in order to have it properly investigate chemical harms and compensate those affected.

These positions were logically supplemented by a further view: that a Vietnam veteran-specific organisation was necessary to achieve the stated goals or would be a useful adjunct to existing organisations in securing an appropriate response from the Federal Government. (It's here where a lack of faith in the RSL most came into play. The relevant rationale was that, if the nation's major ex-service organisation was, at best, a half-hearted supporter, Vietnam veterans would need to independently agitate for an investigation and consequent

Finally, individuals probably needed to feel that something useful could result from their participation in the Action Association. The positive outcomes hoped for may have been ones for themselves and their family members or ones of a more altruistic nature. They could be as personal as the satisfaction to be derived from choosing action over passivity or as general as the hoped-for gaining of compensation for veterans, their wives and affected children.

Before exploring each of the mentioned factors, though, it needs to be acknowledged that soon after the foundation period there would be a wide range of potential reasons why individuals would become active supporters. Branches in later times would need committed members to assist with a myriad of new activities and to deal with the grave problems besetting the most troubled subset of veterans. There were many ways in which individuals averse to committee work could still be useful eg in counselling, the provision of other welfare services, the performance of representative and ceremonial functions, the delivery of education sessions, the supply of repatriation claim assistance, the provision of Association administrative support, the running of social events, and the conducting of fundraising activities.

There were also veterans and family members in later periods who, once assisted by the Association, were keen to 'give back' by getting involved. There were others, too, who after being assisted by the Vietnam Veterans' Counselling Service (VVCS), wanted to repay the organisation widely regarded as responsible for the Service's founding.

Pointers in early 1980 to chemical exposure as (at least) a possible cause of existent veterans' health problems or of problems to come.

In later years, when there was support in the scientific and medical communities for the idea that chemical exposure in the course of Vietnam service was harmful, and when that support was reported to veterans, it would be, in a sense, easier for those veterans to believe that the Vietnam-relevant chemicals were dangerous. In the early months of 1980, however, there was no widely publicised scientific analysis of the impact of chemical exposure specifically on Vietnam veterans on which to rely.

In order to reach a conclusion in the establishment period that exposure had been or was likely to be harmful, veterans and their families could have drawn on a very wide range of pointers. Some of these pointers would be at best 'indicative', 'circumstantial' or of the 'weight of opinion' variety. Together, though, and in concert with the public support of influential individuals and organisations, they were to be extraordinarily persuasive.

Veterans' recollections of nausea and other conditions at the time of direct exposure to chemicals (or when they were in chemical-affected areas) constituted a significant pointer to harm when such exposure was later publicised or discussed. The development of rashes soon after exposure was an especially potent symptom, as defoliant-caused chloracne (like skin conditions associated with the tropical climate) were extraordinarily persistent.

Reports in the establishment period of Australian involvement in wartime chemical or other crop/jungle spraying, even when disputed, seemed to give credence to chemical concerns, even without commentary on the dangers of the most likely chemical sprays. Australian servicemen would, by implication, have handled the sprayed substances, and any Australian spraying was likely to have been in areas occupied by Australian troops. These concerns were inevitably heightened when service in already defoliated areas, as distinct from direct contact, was concluded to be harmful. Reports on perimeter and other hand-spraying by Australian servicemen using chemicals with allegedly nasty side-effects would have added to suspicions, as would the early expansion of the list of dangerous chemicals to include insecticides.

The recollections of veterans who, during the war, had been told to take precautions and wear protective clothing when applying chemicals would also have been pointers to harm in late 1979 and early 1980 when these memories were the subject of chat and reportage. If the chemicals weren't harmful, the thinking went, why were precautions necessary?

When subsequently recalled, the well-publicised 1970 US decision to phase out defoliant use in Vietnam (following restricted use in the US) would further have prompted suspicions of human harm and thus harm to servicemen. During the establishment period, reports on scientists' wartime concerns about human exposure to chemical agents - mostly derived from experiments with rats and mice - were also noted in newspaper articles. They would also have prompted suspicions about lingering harms.

Media reports on chemical harms to the Vietnamese may also have prompted apprehension, even though these reports were rarely detailed, were unaccompanied by the later photographic evidence of deformities (however caused), were reliant on information provided by Vietnamese officials and were sometimes accompanied by reminders that there were no supporting studies or reliable statistics. Caution naturally greeted poisoning allegations by the former enemy, especially when reparation claims were in the offing and when politicians giving credence to the allegations in the Federal Parliament were mostly from the Labor Party (and thus viewed as opposed to the war). A few articles about chemical harms to Vietnamese appeared in the establishment period. By contrast, there were numerous letters to newspapers in the establishment period expressing concern for the Vietnamese, often noting that they hadn't been mentioned in stories about chemical harm to veterans. Editorials also reminded readers of the likely effect on the Vietnamese of the large quantities and heavy concentrations of chemicals used during the war.

Adding weight to suspicions about the impact of chemical exposure was reportage during and before the establishment period on various matters specific to US Vietnam veterans. These included chemical illness and/or child deformity claims by those veterans, illness and deformity statistics, the death of allegedly exposed veterans, the activities of US 'victims' organisations, the commencement of legal proceedings against the manufacturers of wartime defoliants and admissions by those manufacturers that the defoliants, as used in Vietnam, were dangerous. A story in the establishment period with a headline heralding payment of two defoliant claims by the US Veterans Administration seemed at first glance to indicate that the US Government had acknowledged significant chemical harms. However, the report was actually about chloracne, which had been acknowledged as war-caused in Australia, albeit by being lumped together with other skin conditions.

There had also been post-war reports in which individuals involved in the US push for compensation warned Australian servicemen of the effects of chemical exposure and urged them to take action. Other stories on the extent of US forces' defoliant exposure seemed to make Australian exposure more likely and seemed, too, to confirm the extraordinary toxicity of dioxin (the 'contaminant' produced in the manufacturing of 2,4,5-T). President Carter's order, in the establishment period, to investigate the health effects of Vietnam defoliants, was also reported in Australian newspapers. (The matter of the US influence on Australian actions will be returned to in a later instalment.)

The support of other ESOs in late 1979/early 1980 for the investigation of chemical harms and compensation of those effected, including compensation of wives and children (not covered by repatriation legislation) would also have been persuasive, noting that even the Federal Executive of the RSL was conditionally supportive of investigations and compensation early in the establishment period. The most important backing, though, came from the ACT President of the Regular Defence Force Welfare Association, Brian Fegan, whose call for an inquiry pre-dated the call by Szapiel and McMinn by a day. Graham Bell, of the Korea and South East Asia Forces

Association (and later President of the Queensland Branch of the VVAA), called in mid-January for complete medical checks of all Korea and Vietnam servicemen, thereby signalling that his organisation also took the prospect of chemical harm seriously. In Tasmania a statement by Rod Murphy, an office holder with the South-East Asia Veterans Association, also indicated that his organisation was concerned about the consequences of exposure.

The publicised admission by the Pentagon in mid-December 1979 that there had been as many as 30 defoliant missions over Phuoc Tuy province and that a sixth of the province had been sprayed with Agent Orange, would hardly have quelled fears.

Reporting of the attention given to the Vietnam chemical issue by Australian politicians in the establishment period would also have indicated that claims about the dangerous consequences of exposure were not far-fetched. The Minister for Veterans' Affairs, Evan Adermann, responded in a range of public ways to the issues raised by veterans, and the chairman of the Senate Standing Committee on Science and the Environment (later to conduct an inquiry into chemical exposure) expressed public concern about reports of veterans' ill-health. Labor MP Doug Everingham, a medical practitioner and former Minister for Health, reminded the Government of its obligations under repatriation legislation and said that the connection between certain conditions and defoliant exposure "seemed obvious". In the period before the Parliament reconvened for the year, other members and senators were reported as making comments supportive of veterans, advising them on appropriate action, endorsing the investigation of harms or supporting compensation for children. At the end of January, a Liberal backbencher even signalled his intention to introduce a private member's bill to temporarily ban 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D, pending the outcomes of the Government's (Sydney University) defoliant study. On the Parliament resuming on 19 February there was a great deal activity around the Vietnam chemical exposure issue but most of it seemed not to translate into media coverage and would consequently have been little known to veterans.

Historical parliamentary attention to the Vietnam chemical issue may also have been influential if it was recalled in late December 1979/early 1980. Few war-time questions in the Federal Parliament about chemical warfare were about defoliant harms, and the few defoliant exchanges or statements that were about harms to humans almost exclusively concerned the consequences of crop destruction for the Vietnamese, the results of rubber plantation destruction for Cambodians or, in just a few cases, possible birth defects among the Vietnamese. No one in the Parliament would seem to have been concerned during the war about defoliant-related harms to Australian servicemen.

Post-war parliamentary mentions were more likely to be recalled in early 1980, if known of. Questions like those asked by the late John Kerin, the Labor Member for Werriwa, in November of 1978 – ones specifically about veterans and Agent Orange - while not widely publicised, would certainly have been registered by some of Kerin's military and ex-military constituents in and around the Holsworthy army base. The few other parliamentary expressions of concern for veterans because of their exposure to defoliants were less likely to be known about outside the Parliament. However, the consequences of a May 1979 enquiry from a Liberal backbencher about the actions that should be taken by veterans believing themselves to be suffering from chemical exposure were publicised; they may have prompted veterans' concerns, especially as the Minister for Veterans Affairs thought no special action necessary beyond lodgement of a repatriation claim. If nothing else, these mentions, when known of, would have given apprehensions some credibility, at least among veterans less aware of the political and point-scoring dimensions of parliamentary action.

The reported willingness of lawyers to aid the early components of the Action Association

Sydney Morning Herald | Saturday, January 05, 1980

Govt asks Agent Orange victims to make claims

CANBERRA. — The Minister for Veterans' Affairs, Mr Adermann, urges Australian ex-servicemen who believe they have suffered from exposure to the chemical defoliant Agent Orange in Vietnam to contact his department.

Agent Orange is a herbicide containing dioxin, one of the most powerful poisons known, in the carrier ingredients 2-4-5T and 2-4-D.

Mr Adermann said he would like to see "less talk and more action by veterans in pursuing their well-known rights."

The department was being informed by US authorities of their efforts to uncover links between the herbicide and disorders.

So far no evidence had been uncovered linking human disorders with exposure to Agent Orange other than Chloracne.

was also a pointer to the substance in chemical allegations. The relevant reasoning in early 1980 would have been simple: that neither the American attorneys leading the US class action, nor the Brisbane solicitor representing most Australian Vietnam veterans in that action would be devoting large amounts of time and effort to an uncertain cause. A news story in mid-February 1980 reporting that the American legal team was acting on a contingency (no win, no fee) basis, probably strengthened this thinking. This was so, despite the revelation that the Brisbane solicitor would be entitled to appropriate fees, regardless of the class action outcome: a typical Australian fee arrangement for the time. The additional involvement of a Melbourne solicitor, David Teed, in the class action and other matters might, through word of mouth, have made Victorian veterans more apprehensive about chemical harm allegations. The involvement of WA solicitors in the class action was either not a matter of public knowledge in the establishment period or was, like the WA RSL's financial support for WA veterans' involvement in the US proceedings, not considered newsworthy elsewhere.

Peculiar reports, early in the establishment period, that the Administrative Appeals Tribunal would conduct an inquiry into Vietnam chemical harms also invested the issue with substance. Even

MELBOURNE: Australia used 19 million gallons (86 million litres) of defoliants in Vietnam, a leading organic chemist said in Melbourne on Saturday night.

Mr John Evans, guest lecturer in history and the philosophy of science at Melbourne University, said the defoliants comprised four main groups: Agent Orange, Agent Purple, Agent White and Agent Blue.

Speaking after addressing a meeting of Vietnam Veterans, Mr Evans said, "These figures have been produced by the American Academy of Science".

Spraying at Yarram

the widely reported February 1972 interest of Justice Toose in possible defoliant-cancer connections for Vietnam veterans (described in the earliest article in this series) would also, if recalled, have lent heft to the chemical issue.

The extravagant language used in media stories in the establishment period left no doubt as to the dangerous consequences of wartime chemical exposure, referring to dioxin, the by-product of 2,4,5-T, as not just 'deadly' and 'toxic' but as 'the most poisonous man-made substance known' and "one of the most deadly chemicals known to man" etc. These descriptions, even without information on the extraordinary strength of the defoliants used in Vietnam, would understandably have heightened and validated chemical concerns. It would have seemed impossible for such a (reputedly) dangerous chemical, when applied in such extraordinary quantities, to not be injurious. (The relevant media stories included ones about birth deformities in veterans' children and about a high incidence of abnormalities, in addition to information on the harms incurred by veterans, themselves.)

Still more important in forming a view about the dangerous nature of the chemicals used in Vietnam was the post-war publicising of concerns about the civilian use of the same defoliants within Australia. Allegations about still births, miscarriages and birth defects as a result of exposure to 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D in the town of Yarram in Victoria prompted stories in the media throughout 1978, with public interest fuelled by (in almost exhausting date order) a long-delayed, fast initial inquiry that found no problem, the establishment of a second inquiry, a preliminary 'no problem' finding by the second inquiry, a temporary part-ban on the herbicides, a reopened investigation by the (Federal) National Health and Medical Research Council (NHMRC), a finding by the NHMRC that the herbicides posed no risk, an announcement by the Victorian Health Minister that the Victorian inquiry had reached the same conclusion, accusations that the Minister had preempted the Victorian outcome, the lifting of the temporary Victorian ban, and the eventual release of the Victorian inquiry report (yet again absolving the herbicides). Following these events was reporting on a new cluster of deformities, this time in Sale. In response, the Victorian Premier, Mr Hamer, asked for a review of the last inquiry report, resulting in experts again rejecting any link between birth defects and the two herbicides. The Victorian Health Minister nonetheless announced that herbicide bans were under consideration only to rule them out a week later.

The wide-ranging, steady stream of newspaper articles, letters and editorials about herbicide-related matters which had appeared during the Victorian and Research Council investigations had continued into early 1979 without eliciting further action from the Victorian Government. The inquiry report was still being considered by the Government when, in early March 1979, an emergency ban was imposed on the use of 2,4,5-T in the US as a result of miscarriages after forest spraying in Oregon. Any hope on the part of conservative politicians and pesticide proponents that defoliant concerns would fade from public view as the year progressed was thereby dashed.

In 1978 there had also been stories about links between fatal birth defects and 2,4,5-T in the Cairns region of Queensland. The State Health Department had conducted an inquiry and the Health Minister had stated there was no cause for concern about the use of 2,4,5-T. There had been even more dramatic allegations in mid-1978 about the cancer deaths of 15 Warriewood (NSW) tomato farmers, said to have been caused by exposure to sprays.

Media coverage of the various 1978 allegations (backed up by stories about effected individuals), of the handling of those allegations by Governments (in ways which failed to allay public concern), and of many related issues, would have been readily recalled by veterans when the Vietnam War dimension to the defoliant issue came to the fore, nationally, at the end of 1979. However, newspaper coverage of Australian reactions to the US ban on 2,4,5-T in March 1979 would have been even fresher in veterans' memories in the establishment period. That coverage was made especially memorable by connections dramatically forged between the banned defoliant and Australian Vietnam veterans by the US Class action lawyer, Victor Yannacone. Yannacone was reported to have said that "Australian Vietnam veterans and their children could face death or deformity from exposure to herbicides", that deformity patterns had appeared among the children of US veterans and that between four and five thousand of those veterans had died of "particularly virulent cancers" between 1974 and 1978.

The Australian coverage of the US ban would have been memorable, too, because of the RSL National President's 12 March 1979 statement that he had been aware of the possible illness link for some years (presumably because of Justice Toose's 1972 question about it) but that there had not been strong enough evidence to warrant earlier action by the League. Also memorable would have been the RSL's statement that it would support the repatriation case of an Australian veteran who suspected that his health problems had been caused by defoliants. That veteran was Bernie Szapiel, and a newspaper interview with him was the first step in a public journey that would culminate in the December 1979 announcement that a Vietnam veterans' organisation was being formed.

Together, the Yannacone, Szapiel and RSL news stories, arising from the ongoing domestic defoliant controversy (and given late-stage impetus by the US 2,4,5-T ban) gave the Vietnam veterans' chemical exposure issue an unprecedented media prominence and a clear Australian dimension. March 1979 was thus the important turning point in the exposure story. From this time, it would have been hard for veterans encountering material in the media about domestic defoliant concerns not to wonder about their own circumstances.

The US ban prompted further Australian action. The Federal Health Minister sought details of the US ban, and the Victorian Health Minister advised against the use of the herbicide, before imposing another temporary ban. The National Health and Medical Research Council soon after announced that it was unimpressed by the basis for the US decision, prompting media and public disquiet which continued beyond May (when Bernie Szapiel and others revealed to "The Age" that they were preparing compensation claims for herbicide related ill-health) and June (when the Research Council “rejected new evidence which linked 2,4,5-T with miscarriages, spontaneous abortions and foetal abnormalities”). The controversy then continued in a lower-profile way, except in the reliably sensational pages of the “Melbourne Truth”, until the end of the year, with the by-now-customary stories about defoliant decisions by Governments at home and abroad, with other claims of domestic defoliant harms, and with letters to newspaper editors etc but with the important addition of reports on US veterans’ actions/defoliant concerns.

New developments in the Cairns controversy in the establishment period would have caused veterans to recall the earlier chemical rows. These early 1980 events can be readily summarised: in mid-January the Queensland Health Minister ordered a new investigation into the previously alleged connection between birth defects and defoliants only to have his decision overturned by Premier Bjelke-Petersen. Bjelke-Petersen ensured further attention for the issue by asserting that Cairns birth defects were caused by aborigines’ venereal disease. To make matters even worse, the Premier and the Health Minister told the media that the quashed re-investigation might yet happen but then announced closer monitoring of births on the heels of a request by the Cairns branch of the Australian Medical Association for an inquiry by medical scientists.

Governments’ mishandling of the controversies (soon to be duplicated in the Fraser Government’s mishandling of the Vietnam chemical issue) fed into ideas of science as being ‘out of control’, a notion returned to later in this series. The mishandling also fuelled perceptions of Governments as unwilling to protect their employees and citizens, (noting that the relevant Governments in Australia were mostly State ones. Mishandling further encouraged suspensions of coverups to protect powerful vested interests e.g., to prevent politicians and bureaucrats from being held to account for bad decisions about access to the relevant substances, to protect the economic interests of manufacturers and farmers/commercial users, and to ensure that manufacturers and commercial users were not subject to litigation. At best, the incidents encouraged the view that Governments were careless regulators. These themes would all feed directly into the early VVAA defoliant narrative and will be returned to later in this series.

Pre-December 1979 media reports connecting civilian use of defoliants and birth deformities and then mentioning the use of the same defoliants in Vietnam – stories which stopped short of directly connecting deformities with war service – would doubtless have seemed indicative of harms when recalled in the establishment period. Similarly, veterans in the establishment period recalling earlier media reports which claimed with greater certainty that Australian veterans were affected by chemicals (or were likely to have been affected) would have regarded these reports as early pointers to the harmful effects of the Vietnam chemicals. Stories referring to the persistence of the defoliant caused skin condition chloracne (even when other nasty rashes were not distinguished from it) were seen as clear evidence of defoliant harms, as well as a counter to the wartime claim that the defoliants weren’t injurious to humans. Stories about skin conditions would also have prompted the question: “what other side effects of exposure are there?”

Stories which appeared in the early pages of the “Melbourne Truth” in the late 1970s – when journalist Adrian Tame refused to let go of the domestic herbicide story – warrant special mention as pointers to harms for at least some Victorian veterans. Some of the related headlines were, in the best “Truth” tradition, unforgettable. That the stories were often accompanied by photographs of mammiferous, partly-clad young women – then known as ‘page three girls’ – may also have ensured the attention of veterans ... or not. The same visual stimuli may have caused veterans to see Tame’s grim, wide-ranging article on 2,4,5-T, “Spraying To Kill”, in the January 1980 edition of “Australian Penthouse”.

Other stories in the establishment period about commencing, completed or unfunded studies of domestic herbicide use could all have contributed to a sense that there was something to be worried about in wartime exposure. A mid-January 1980 story revealed the findings of a study linking birth defects in NSW to national fluctuations in the use of 2,4,5-T. Also reported at this time was the commencement of a NSW Health Commission study of the effects of 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D (including their impact on families of Vietnam veterans). Another story soon afterwards reported a Brisbane researcher as saying that four annual requests for funding to study Queensland pesticide and herbicide levels had failed, despite Queenslanders having the highest pesticide levels in Australia, and despite sprays in the State containing at least eight chemicals which had been banned in the US. A late January 1980 story relying on the work of a different researcher confirmed that the incidence of Cairns defects was higher than in a Sydney study.

Publicising of veterans' fears in late 1979/early 1980 unsurprisingly prompted non-veterans with exposure-like health conditions or children with defects to tell their stories to the media. Some of these non-veterans had jobs which involved the handling and application of defoliants, including work for forestry organisations and local councils. Their health problems and deaths seemed to confirm veterans' chemical harm claims, even if the concentration of dioxin in domestic 2,4,5-T was said to be tiny compared to the concentration in the wartime product.

A similar indirect suspicion-heightening function (with veteran exposure stories prompting others' concerns to be revealed, and those new concerns seeming to validate the original veterans' worries) was performed by stories about the levels of chemicals in foods as various as fruit and ice cream. In the establishment period a story appeared, commenting on insecticide levels in breast milk; the levels, themselves, were less dangerous than they had previously been, but the chemicals' presence was more widespread.

In the same circular way, the chemical worries of non-veterans who'd been in Vietnam during the war would have validated the original concerns. Bruce Munday, a civilian surgical team member in Vietnam, provided a comprehensive list of those non-civilians in letters to various newspapers in mid-January 1980. He noted that Australian Army nurses had not been included in stories about exposed veterans and included Vietnamese living in Australia in his civilian list. Although that list was not restricted to people living in Australia, it did not mention the Vietnamese population still in Vietnam (about whom other letter writers in the establishment period had expressed poison concerns). The greater the number of potential chemical victims (or groups of victims), the more valid veterans' apprehensions seemed to be.

The next instalment in this series concludes the survey of pointers to Vietnam chemical harms which existed in late 1979 and early 1980 when branches of the Vietnam Veterans Action Association were being established.

30 12 1980 SUNDAY TELEGRAPH, JANUARY 13, 1980

THE Sunday Telegraph SAYS

Time to peel the Orange

So the Federal Government has finally moved to set up an inquiry into claims by a host of Vietnam veterans that they were injured, and their children born deformed, by the defoliant Agent Orange.

Simple justice demanded such an inquiry. But it probably would not have been held if it had not been for the investigations into the issue by this newspaper and The Australian.

That reflects little credit on a Government with any pretension to a social conscience.

The Repatriation Minister, Mr Adermann, has argued that until recently not many claims had been made by ex-soldiers.

Such an explanation cuts no ice. At best, it reveals a questionable modus operandum: do nothing until you have to.

In the United States an official inquiry has been underway for three years.

Why, then, did not our Government take its cue and seek out the truth about the young men it sent to Vietnam to fight alongside our American ally?

Agent Orange contains the poison dioxin – one of the nastiest substances mankind has concocted.

Its effects are open to debate, especially on its genetic consequences.

However the inquiry goes, Mr Adermann will then have a real decision to make. His recent track record provides no indication that he will make the best one.

Kel Robertson, who is writing about the origins of the Vietnam veterans' movement in Australia, is anxious to see any Vietnam Veterans Action Association or VVAA documents you may have from the period between Dec 1979 and June 1981.

He has early copies of Debrief but is keen to see:

- Minutes of the May 1980 National Congress of the Vietnam Veterans Action Association (venue probably Canberra) and related correspondence;
- Minutes of the March/April 1981 Sydney multi-state meeting convened by the NSW Branch of the VVAA (and related correspondence); and minutes of the May 1981 VVAA National Congress in Canberra and related correspondence.

If you have these or any other documents from the Dec 79 to mid-1981 period, Kel is keen to hear from you. Please email him at vvhistory99@gmail.com

Vietnam veteran teachers names needed

NSW teachers have Honour Boards like the one above honouring the service of teachers in World War I, World War II and subsequent wars, but 50 years after the end of the war, the names of very few Vietnam veterans are recorded.

The NSW Department of Education wishes to remedy this neglect by developing an Honour Board to recognise the service of their employees who saw active service in the Vietnam War.

So names for the Honour Board are being sought.

Are you a Vietnam veteran who has been a teacher or do you know anyone who was a teacher who served in Vietnam?

If so, please contact Ken Stevenson at kenstevo@me.com

The new Honour Board will be dedicated in a ceremony starting at 9.30am on 14 December 2023 at 105 Phillip St, Parramatta.

All are invited. ■

How did our families cope when we came home?

Extract

Despite the counselling service to of my children don't talk to each other. I find it very sad. One daughter has changed her name. I believe she wants to divorce herself form our family but emotionally she finds that difficult. Her reflection on her childhood is biased towards the problems of her upbringing. She explains to me that we were lacking in empathy towards her. She said to me once — when you weren't'around Dad was very hard on me..■

Vietnam Veterans' Stories

From letters diaries and memories

HMAS SYDNEY: the bloody “American War” 1966-67

Here we have Part 7 of the story of HMAS Sydney told by one of the crew, John Ingram

(Part 7 tells of the dodgy state of escort ships and the targeting of HMAS Sydney by anti-Vietnam war protestors)

HMAS DUCHESS made her debut round trip to Vung Tau essentially trailing one shaft.

The Navy was so short of escort ships as a result of dockyard industrial action the Fleet Commander was forced to make unpalatable decisions to ensure some form of protection for the SYDNEY. In one deployment the Daring class destroyer DUCHESS (D154), then on loan from the RN as a replacement for the VOYAGER, had a defective seal on one of her two thrust blocks. To repair would necessitate docking. Instead, she accompanied us to Vietnam and back functioning on one shaft only. The other shaft was in theory “available”, but only when manoeuvring or in an emergency situation, due to the loss of lubricating oil and resulting overheating issues.

The former Battle class destroyer ANZAC, converted to a training ship, yet deployed as an escort for the SYDNEY

In another instance the training destroyer ANZAC (D59) was deployed as SYDNEY's sole escort despite the fact her weapons' systems largely deactivated or of limited value. Her remaining (4.5" twin mount) "A" turret was operable, manually only, as the gun direction system was disabled. Ordering a veteran training ship to a war zone with scores of young men onboard, knowing of her inability to fight to protect herself and others, was to me inherently daft. The Argentine Navy did this in 1982 during the Falklands Conflict with their training ship, the General BELGRANO, incurring the most tragic consequences including the loss of several hundred young lives.

HMAS TORRENS on fast approach to refuel

By 1972 the situation had not improved. I was then serving in the newly commissioned destroyer escort HMAS TORRENS and we were committed as Australia's sole naval contribution to the 5-nation peace-keeping treaty known as ANZUK. TORRENS was briefly removed from the ANZUK alliance obligation in February and March of that year and ordered to escort SYDNEY while in Vietnamese "operational" waters. On completion TORRENS resumed her ANZUK Treaty role.

Police move people protesting against the visit of US President Lyndon B. Johnson in Liverpool Street, Sydney on October 22, 1966.

(Sun Herald)

Up until the TET (Viet New Year) Offensive in February, 1968, Australians were, in general, supportive of our nation's involvement to contain what was known as the "domino" theory of progressive collapse of Asian democracies to communist regimes. President Johnson and his military chiefs had tried to convince Allied forces the war was proceeding well etc while the steady build-up of forces and combat continued. However, "embedded" war correspondents were telling a very different story illustrated so convincingly on the TV news, day in/day out.

The catchcry "All the way with LBJ" began to have a hollow core as the global peace movement, conceived in the Anti-Nuclear War movement, gathered strength. The "Flower power" movement soon crossed the Pacific and anti-war rallies became common in such hot beds of discontent as university campuses, even at the gates of military bases including Garden Island and Cowper Wharf Road. When SYDNEY was alongside in her home port her presence was marked by unruly demonstrations, often restricting movement of naval personnel and vehicles. We were instructed not to wear uniform ashore lest we be sworn at or abused, even spat upon. The Navy urged us to delist home phone numbers from directories to avoid intimidating phone calls. ■

About Porky's People

This book tells the history of the Seventh Battalion, The Royal Australian Regiment (7 RAR) during its first tour in South Vietnam. The book primarily uses images to tell this story, whether they be photographs, artwork, maps, or newspaper cuttings. As the title of the book states, it is about Porky's People and the priority for selection of images has been the people who served in or supported the battalion.

The book is set out generally in chronological order so that the reader can easily follow the sequence of events. The scope of the book covers the period from the raising of the battalion through to the time it returned to Australia and the immediate aftermath.

Each operation has its own chapter with an accompanying map. A short introduction to each operation is provided — sufficient for the reader to understand what the operation was about and the key events. For some operations there are a large number of photographs, and these chapters are necessarily much longer than other operations that have few, if any, photographs.

Newspaper articles have been selected on the basis that they directly describe 7 RAR activities or people, or they provide relevant background information.

This illustrated history captures the essence of that deployment through a unique composition of narratives, reports, records, maps, newspaper clippings, personal reflections and photos. Karl's work is a tribute to all of Porky's People but, in particular, to those of 7 RAR who gave their all in the war."

Energy Rebate to provide bill relief

The Commonwealth, state and territory governments are working together to provide targeted and temporary electricity bill relief to eligible households.

You can get bill relief if you are the primary electricity account holder or, for some energy providers, another named account holder on your electricity account. You must also hold a Pensioner Concession Card, a Commonwealth Seniors Health Card or a Veteran Gold Card.

Your household can only get one bill relief rebate, even if there is more than one eligible person living there. You can only get this bill relief for your principal place of residence. How much you get depends on where you live, with between $175 and $500 available to targeted households and $325 to $650 available to small businesses.

If you are eligible, are not named on the bill and you pay for electricity, contact your electricity provider to discuss your options.

If you live in Queensland or Western Australia, you do not need to take any action because these state governments are including this energy bill relief in their state rebate programs, which are being given to all households.

If you currently receive energy concessions, in most cases the electricity provider will automatically apply the bill relief to your electricity account and you do not need to do anything. This will reduce the amount you owe on your next bill. How and when this happens depends on where you live as each state and territory may do things a little differently.

If you don't receive energy concessions, please go to energy.gov.au/bill-relief to find a link to your state or territory with instructions about what to do. This could be to contact your energy provider or your state/territory government with your concession card type and the DVA file number on it. Give them consent to check your card online for payment of the rebate.

If you get your electricity from your strata or landlord in a caravan park, apartment building, retirement home or village and your household is eligible for the bill relief, you will not automatically receive the rebate. However, you will be able to access a direct payment through your state or territory government.

Please check www.energy.gov.au/bill-relief for the latest information."

The rebate can be obtained by going through MyGov (if you have it) or by calling your energy provider in your State or Territory. There are different payment methods for this rebate for each State and Territory. ■

THE UNKNOWN COMIC

To all of you who collect these Newsletters. You've got issues.

A lawyer runs a stop sign and gets pulled over by the cops. He thinks he's smarter being a big shot lawyer from Canberra and is better educated than a cop from Braidwood. The officer asks for his license, and the lawyer asks, "What for?" The cop responds, "You didn't come to a complete stop at the stop sign." The lawyer says, "I slowed down and no one was coming." "You still didn't come to a complete stop. License please," says the cop impatiently. The lawyer says, "If you can show me the legal difference between slow down and stop, I'll give you my license and you can give me the ticket. If not, you let me go and don't give me the ticket." The officer agrees and asks the lawyer to get out of his car. The lawyer steps out and the cop takes out his baton and starts beating the lawyer with it, and says, "Do you want me to stop or just slow down?"

Did you hear about the guy who drank invisible ink? He's at the hospital waiting to be seen.

A woman came into a clinic where she was seen by a younger doctor. After about four minutes in the examination room, she burst out screaming as she ran down the hall. One of the more experienced physicians, stopped her and asked what the problem was, and she told him her story. After the older doctor settled her down in another room he marched down the hallway back to where the young doctor was writing on his clipboard.

"What the hell is the matter with you?!!" he demanded "That elderly woman is 76 years old, has six grown children and thirteen grandchildren, and you told her she was pregnant?" The younger doctor continued writing and without looking up said: Does she still have the hiccups?"

It was only when I bought a motorbike that I found out that adrenaline is brown.

PSK FINANCIAL SERVICES ARTICLE

Investment scams peak in Australia – How can you spot one?

October is cyber security awareness month and a good reminder to look at what you could be doing to protect your personal information and your money.

Losses to scams have skyrocketed in recent years, with combined losses reported to different Australian government agencies up a whopping 80% over a 12-month period.

What's more, investment scams were identified as the most commonly reported type of scam, which is why it's important to stay alert and protect what's yours*.

What is a scam?

A scam is where someone tricks you into handing over your money or personal details. They often appear real, catch you by surprise, and pressure you to act right away.

What sets an investment scam apart is it generally aims to convince people that an investment is real, that the returns are high, and risks are low. This can be very appealing if it sounds legit.

What scams cost Australians the most?

Over $3 billion in total losses were reported to government agencies in 2022.

Investment scams made up half of all scam-related financial losses and collectively cost us about $1.5 billion*.

What are the common types of investment scams?

A few of the more common scams to look out for include:

Super scams – these offer to help you withdraw your super money early or move it into a self-managed super fund, but you never see the money.

Crypto scams – these may invite you to invest in fake cryptocurrency exchanges, websites or apps. They may also involve making payments with cryptocurrencies, like bitcoin or ether, which aren't easily recovered as they can be hard to track.

Ponzi schemes – these pay existing investors with funds collected from new investors but there's no real investment.

Imposter bonds – these provide real looking websites almost identical to well-known financial services companies, offering favourable fake bonds or term deposits.

Fake initial public offerings – these are timed with legitimate company listings and impersonate companies raising capital and offering shares to the public for the first time.

How do scammers contact you?

The top five contact methods scammers use to target people, and how much Australians have reported losing through each channel are listed below.

Text message - $28 million

Phone - $141 million

Email - $77 million

Internet - $74 million

Social networking and online forums - $80 million.

While text messages topped the list for contact preference, Australians reported losing substantially more money to phone and social media scams*.

Who's most likely to be scammed?

Older Australians are the most at risk with those aged 65 or over losing more money than any other age group, followed by those aged 55 to 64.

No age group in Australia is immune though, with those under age 18 also reporting hundreds of thousands of dollars lost over a 12-month period*.

How can you spot a scam?

Scams can happen to anyone, and they work because the stories scammers come up with to steal your money and personal information are often very believable.

Scammers are also smart and take advantage of new technology, products, services, and major names and events to convince you that their scam is real.

Here are some red flags to look out for:

You're told you'll make or save money, or offered a deal that sounds too good to be true (they often are!).

You're promised guaranteed, quick and easy investment returns.

There are no risks or low risks as you can get out at any time or be refunded.

They pressure you to act fast, so you don't have time to think things through.

They ask you to pay in unusual ways like through cryptocurrencies.

They contact you from overseas, so they're harder to prosecute and track down.

They ask for insurance or taxes before they give your money back to get more out of you.

They use social media to create fake news stories sometimes with well-known personalities.

What can you do to protect yourself?

As a general rule, our key government agencies promote a three-step approach* to stay safe:

Stop

If you're ever unsure, don't give your money or personal information to anyone. Scammers often pretend they're from organisations you know and trust like your bank or the ATO to get you to verify who you are and give away your details.

Think

Ask yourself if the text, email or call could be a fake before you click on or agree to anything. Scammers will send you links to fake websites or attachments that have viruses which will steal your money and personal info. If you're ever unsure, don't respond and contact the organisation or person you think you're talking to, using details from official websites.

Protect

If something doesn't feel right, act immediately. Change your passwords and contact your providers as soon as you notice anything unusual.

How can you report a scam?

You can get assistance by contacting Australia and New Zealand's national identity and cyber support service IDCARE. They can help you make a plan to limit the damage, and support you through the process. You can also report anything suspicious to Scamwatch.

If you want some other pointers for boosting your cyber security, the Australian Cyber Security Centre has the following tips this cyber security awareness month:

Update your devices (and regularly).

Turn on multi-factor authentication (which adds an extra layer of security to prove your identity).

Back up important files.

Use passphrases and password managers.

VETERANS MORTALITY REPORT

As you are aware, Vietnam Veterans are dying at a rate higher than while on Active Service. This situation is perhaps a natural phenomenon compared to non-serving members of the public, who might die of an illness which is equally distributed through the population of the same age group.

Vietnam Veterans Peacekeepers & Peacemakers Association of Australia (NSW Branch) Inc has for many years maintained records of the deaths of Vietnam Veterans and the cause of death if known. This has proved invaluable regarding the health standards of Vietnam Veterans when compared to the general public. We seek your assistance in reporting the death of Vietnam Veterans, past or recent, to allow the Federation to expand and preserve it's record base.

Kindly circulate a copy of this page through your RSL Club, Unit or Corps reunions and meetings and raise it as an issue. The information gained from these reports will greatly assist all Vietnam Veterans and their families regarding future claims for benefits.

Please consider leaving a bequest in your will

Every Veteran deserves a lifestyle and better treatment than is currently available. Every Veteran should be able to successfully attain their rights to pensions and just compensation.

Yet we still receive veterans unaware of their rights, what they may be entitled to, and where and how to apply or enter a claim.

Through your Will, you have the power to help us achieve our goals. Help surviving veterans, and those that follow them, to receive their true entitlements.

Through your Will you have the power to make a difference. Any gift you bequest to our Association, no matter how large or small, will assist a fellow veteran.

You don't need to be wealthy or have tens of thousands of dollars to make a difference to the lives of veterans and those who follow us. Many people leave amounts both large and small through their wills to our association.

Combined each amount assists our association to carry on the vital support network we provide to the veteran community.

Loving Lord, bless them forever in Your eternal peace.
 Let the sounds of strife, the cries of battle, the wounds of war be calmed for all eternity in Your loving and endless grace.
 Let these great warriors find rest at last,
 Ever reminded that we who are left behind
 Cherish their spirit, honor their commitment, send them our love,
 and will never forget the service that they gave.
